Almeida touted his extremist views all over social media, pointing guns at the camera in photos he posted to Instagram under creepy usernames like “necropedocell” — a seeming reference to necrophilia, pedophilia and celibacy, according to a complaint unsealed Tuesday in Brooklyn Federal Court.

“The defendant has repeatedly expressed an interest in the abuse of children and abuse of animals,” wrote Assistant U.S. Attorney Chand Edwards-Balfour in a letter to the judge in the case, asking that Almeida be held in jail without bail.

“The defendant’s interest in an extremist organization like O9A, which has been associated with violent conduct, is a serious concern,” added Edwards-Balfour.

A friend of the Almeida family, who lived in the same Astoria building, described the accused Satanist as “a stupid kid.” The guns belonged to Almeida’s brother, who served in the military, the friend said.

“He never talked about being a Satanist or anything like that,” the friend said.

Almeida posted two photos of himself holding guns on Feb. 20, one a green pistol and the other a long rifle.

“For the 2K pedophile haters.”

The same day he posted a photo of a gagged child, with the caption “This is how I feel about the past through rose colored lenses.”

Just this month, on Nov. 13, Almeida posted a photo of a stab wound, accompanied by the caption “This is how I feel about the past through rose colored lenses.”

Some of his followers shot back at Almeida on social media, with one calling him a “store value Eliot Rodger,” referring to the 22-year-old misogynist who killed six people in Isla Vista, Calif. in 2014. Rodger is credited with starting the incel movement of “involuntary celibates” who lash out at women.
